

In order to help prevent cheating, I (Laura Ziegler) shared Iowa State University's Chegg Infographic (included in files) and provided the following description:

1. You are not allowed give help to or receive help from another person. You are not allowed to post exam questions online or share them with others. You are not allowed to discuss questions with other students. If students work with others or copy answers from other sources, they will receive a 0 on the exam. If students post exam questions online, they will receive an F in the course.
2. Please complete Questions 1-3 about the exam rules. Failure to select a response to these questions will convert your exam score to a zero unless we receive an email from you confirming you have not violated the exam rules and omitting the questions was an honest mistake.

They then filled out the following 3 questions which were the first 3 questions on each exam:

1. I understand that I am not allowed to discuss questions with others, including students and other individuals. Additionally, I understand that I am not allowed to post questions on websites such as Chegg.com or CourseHero.com.
2. I understand that if I have numbers from a different version of the exam or language from a different version of the exam I will receive a 0 for the entire exam.
3. I understand that if I post questions on websites such as Chegg.com or CourseHero.com, I will receive an F in the course. I also understand that the Dean of Students Office at Iowa State University has worked with websites such as Chegg.com and CourseHero.com and we are able to figure out which students post questions on their websites.

For each question, they had the following choices:

- a. I understand.
- b. I do not understand. Email Dr. Ziegler immediately.
